Smilla Blau: Konrad – Koala At Full Pelt

- A hungry koala turns an apartment upside down in its search for deliciously tasty eucalyptus and makes some new friends along the way
- Riotously funny – a book to read aloud for the entire family, featuring a cute, cheeky koala
- With an original and diverse cast of neighbours

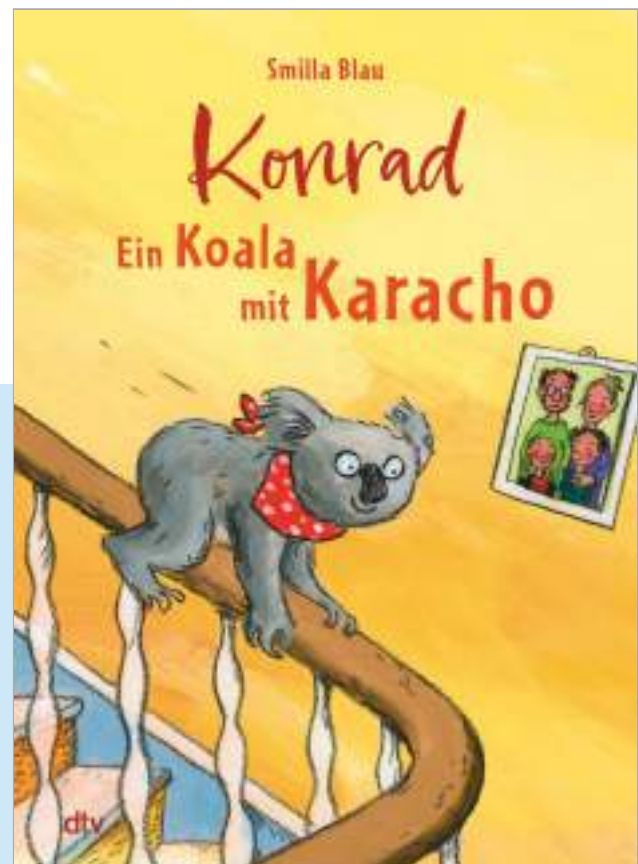

Who's been stealing the toothpaste?

Juri's mother is angry: Someone smeared her expensive new eucalyptus toothpaste all over the bathroom overnight. Juri is angry too: The toothpaste tastes absolutely disgusting, but he and his sister aren't to blame for the mess! To prove it, Juri lies in wait that evening. And would you believe it? It's not long before a tiny creature leaps through the window: Crouching right there in front of him is a koala – an actual one! And it seems to love the disgusting eucalyptus toothpaste. Juri would love to keep this cute critter, but a hungry little koala is hard to hide in an apartment block ...

Smilla Blau was born in 1971. After studying business and economics, she composed advertising texts and sold Swabian brassieres in North America. Emmy, Raul and Tristan set off to solve the flamingo egg mystery

Life in the capybara enclosure is just about perfect. All day long, Emmy, Raul and Tristan lie in the sun, warming their bellies, enjoying their food and relaxing in the pond. At night, they sneak out to visit their friends. Until terrible news begins spreading among the zoo animals: A horrifying predator has been rampaging among the flamingos! Several animals have disappeared. Who would do such a thing? And where are the missing birds?

Christian Tielmann: The Ninja Diaries

- An exciting story full of humour and with the popular ninja theme: Encourages children – reluctant readers in particular – to read
- Saving the world made easy: Just open the book and read!
- Previous books by the author have been translated into over 20 languages

When the adults haven't got a clue, it's up to the Ninja Kids to put things right!

Nick considers himself quite normal. He's good at some things (talking, meditating, breathing in and out – he's especially good at that!) and not so good at other things (doing maths on the blackboard, school in general). But there's one thing he's pretty sure about: He wasn't born to be a ninja. But by accident – quite literally – Nick meets Master Jojo, the sensei of a secret ninja dojo. Soon, he's not only learning awesome moves with Olga, Zoran and the other kids, but he has to save their hometown too.

Suddenly, all the power is out, and nothing is working. Could the evil geniuses Vil and Laine be behind this? Doubtlessly, the ninjas would be in a proper pickle without Nick! He really is more extraordinary than he ever imagined!

Sleepless in Kaninkorva – that's not happening!

Matti has a problem that literally won't let him sleep: there are growling, grumbling noises coming from under his bed. And to make it even worse: it only happens at night. It's a puzzling case, but Wilma soon discovers who is behind the nightly disturbance: it's the boss of Matti's cuddly toys! He doesn't like that Matti prefers cuddling a bunch of goofy ladybirds instead of him – and when he doesn't like something, he gets mad. The trouble is, the cuddly toy boss is a gorilla – a silverback, no less. How on earth do you pacify a silverback when he's lost his rag? Matti is at a loss. But not Wilma. She has a sure-fire solution to bad-tempered bad boys. And it works!

A week of freedom and adventure

Remember little Anke from the award-winning 'C'Mooooon!' comic? It's 1983 now, Anke has grown a little older, and she's off on a riding holiday with her sister Eva and her best friends. Without their parents! The girls are revelling in being together and with the animals, enjoying the farmer's wife's hearty sausage stew, and giggling late into the night. Anke also devotes her time to caring for Banger, a weak piglet. What might seem a rural idyll is also pervaded by the fear of war. Out riding, low-flying military aircraft thunder over their heads, and Anke has to think of her mother, who is organising peace demonstrations. And she's worried about Banger – will he survive?

Stefan Schwarz: The Great Throw – Us Kids Back

Then

- The first children's book from the great German humourist Stefan Schwarz
- Personal insights into the particularities of childhood in the GDR: Authentic, warm-hearted, and with a touch of ambivalence
- With delightful, expressive illustrations by Tanja Székessy

The true, and rarely told, story of a GDR childhood

Stefan is a beloved child – surrounded by his grandma and dear grandfather, his big sisters and parents. Unfortunately, he is forced to learn the violin, because his daycare centre has decided he has an 'aptitude' for it. As he gets older, he swaps the violin for a Judo suit. At least he's not a couch potato, his father thinks. Stefan's father has a job that must be kept secret. Stefan knows nothing about the Stasi, but sometimes he can't help noticing how his father needs to be helped in when he comes home at night, after the Russians have been passing around too much vodka again. So many toasts! Surely you can drink to friendship just as well with cocoa, thinks Stefan, and tries it right away with his friend Pfläumchen.

Stefan Schwarz, born in 1965, spent his childhood and youth swimming, fishing, sailing, rowing and skating in Schwerin – when he wasn't practising violin or going to judo training. As a young man, he wanted to join the GDR intelligence service like his father, but then the Berlin Wall fell. He studied journalism in Leipzig and has been writing as a freelance author ever since.

Tanja Székessy was born in 1969 and graduated from the department of visual communication at the Berlin University of the Arts. Among other things she designed and crafted are a Swatch clock and a photo book as well as illustrations to many textbooks, magazines and advertising companies. She lives in Berlin with her family.

For all children of today and back then – whether from East or West Germany

For Gerda, the Berlin Wall is part of normal life. Only when she has reached her grandma's age will she be able to go to the West, but in her childhood only birds can fly across the border easily. Birds are important in Gerda's family. Her father has a mysterious connection with them, and her grandma has a parakeet, Coco. With Gerda, we experience a vanished world with flag roll call on the schoolyard, homemade doves of peace, and presents from the West.

Three family stories about a wonderfully unsupervised, yet secure childhood

When you've got a lot of siblings, your parents have less time – and the kids are freer to have adventures! Daniela is always in the midst of it all when something happens. Like when her favorite brother, Woffe, digs up the turtle, Gertrud. Or when she and twin sister Wackel set out, hand-in-hand, to walk to the end of the world – that's possible, right?

Anna Maria Praßler: Not Having a Party Is Not the Solution Either

- Authentic children's everyday life – in a women's refuge
- Told with honesty, empathy and energy – a touching and uplifting children's book
- A strong heroine unflinchingly pursuing her goals

»My name is Jagoda, which is Polish for blueberry, and to all the adults reading this: It's not cool to name a child after a fruit.«

Her stupid name is the least of Jagoda's problems. There's something much worse: She's invited Mia to her birthday party – which is not happening as Jagoda lives with her mother in a women's refuge. No one can know that, in case her dad finds her. A birthday party in a women's refuge? No way! But no party at all is not a solution either so Jagoda needs a watertight plan, and she's running out of time. In four days and without any money, Jagoda is going to throw the best party ever!
