Live – Love – Write: A poetic record

Far from home, a woman meets a Catalan writer and has an affair with him. This shakes everything to its core – not just her relationship with her husband, but also the way she thinks about her profession. The experience leads her to make a risky decision: to be true to herself and live the rest of her life as a writer. But does this mean she can she still be present for other people, including her husband and children? Years later, having reached another tipping point in her life, she meets the Catalan writer again, bringing the past and present full circle.

‘Perhaps the story ought to begin with the children.’

After a long period of absence, Nikolas Finck – the son of a manufacturer of school furniture – returns to his parents’ home. One weekend turns into a year. Holed up in the attic at the Villa Sternbald, he delves into his family’s past and begins to tell his story: his childhood and his first love, the invention of the Columba school desk and the tragic entomologist Jean. When an exhibition on ‘Classrooms Through the Ages’ is set up in the house, he gets in the way. Just as he did in the past, Nikolas is pursuing his own plans – he aims to bring the darker side of the family’s history to light, but most of all he wants to protect his nephews’ childhood.

A novel about memory and lies, love and German guilt – multi-layered, epic in depth and mesmerisingly told.

A linguistic work of art, spanning outer space and the world underwater

Theresa Neges lives in a tiny blue flat. She has no job and no money. All she has is Josef, her boyfriend – and even he isn't entirely hers, although they love each other. Theresa walks the streets of Vienna in her big grey coat. She lies at the bottom of the public swimming pool and practises holding her breath, she makes herself dizzy on merry-go-rounds. What she really wants is to be in space: to be light, to float. And to be closer to Betelgeuse, the blazing red giant in the constellation of Orion, to which she has felt a connection since childhood.

A poetic novel, idiosyncratic and gorgeously crafted, with the kind of narrator you want to follow wherever she goes.

‘What a treasure trove of form, beauty and melancholy wisdom!’

Mascha Kaléko is an extraordinary, luminous figure in German literature. Nobody embodies the Berlin of the Weimar Republic – the typewriter-grey metropolis, the gaudy cinema adverts, the nights at the Romanisches Café that never seemed to end – better than Kaléko, the melancholic poet of the city, possessed of a sparkling wit. After she fled from the Nazis in 1938, she sang of her lost homeland in verses written about life as an émigré in New York, Jerusalem and elsewhere. Now, on the fiftieth anniversary of her death, Daniel Kehlmann offers a personal view of her work.

Mascha Kaléko, born in 1907 in Galicia, died in Zurich in 1975, shot to fame in the 1930s with the publication of her Lyrical Short-hand Pad. In 1938 she emigrated to the USA and later to Israel. She is one of the most prominent German-language poets of the 20th century.

Daniel Kehlmann, born in 1975, has been awarded numerous prizes for his work and has been translated many times. He is one of the few German authors of the post-war period to also receive international acclaim. He lives in Berlin, Vienna, and New York.

Anika Decker: Two Reasonable Adults Who Have Seen Each Other Naked

The new novel by the acclaimed screenwriter and director: Anika Decker's debut spent weeks in the Top 20 of the SPIEGEL Bestseller List

Younger man, older woman – a thoroughly normal relationship?

Bridget Jones meets Good Luck to You, Leo Grande

‘Get out there, sweetheart, and live a little. Today is the day for smooching.’

Nina: approaching fifty, divorced, and mother of two children. She doesn't begrudge her ex's new marriage to a young influencer and mother of twins, but she can't deny that there are a few irksome details. Her tiny flat compared to the imposing mansion of her supposedly bankrupt ex, for example. But then something happens that Nina almost refuses to believe: She falls in love with David, twenty years her junior, throwing the established order of her life into disarray. Suddenly, everybody seems to have an opinion on her life, including herself, and if she wants to be happy, she'll have to take a fresh approach to it.

Advanced lessons in finding a rage-life balance

Richy, an ex-teacher of art and social studies from Hamburg, has long since ceased to understand the world. Everything around him is changing: his neighbourhood, the pubs, the shops, the music, his family... which is THE reason why Richy is flipping his lid multiple times a day. When he loses it with a janitor, who won't stop using the leaf-blower, Richy is forced to attend 'anger management training'. At first, he finds these 'Apehit Anonymous' meetings annoying. Yet under the gentle guidance of therapist Norbert, the members of the group become increasingly close and do their best to put what they've learnt into practice. But something seems to have gotten lost in translation, as inexplicable incidents and even deaths begin to occur...

Two women at a turning point and a family business on the brink of collapse

Shortly after her 65th birthday, Johanne Johansen discovers that her family business – Kurt Johansen & Sons, a shipping company steeped in tradition – is on the verge of bankruptcy. Her grandparents' life's work is on the line. Her cousin Luise is ten years younger than Johanne and happily married. Or so she thought, until her husband suffers a terrible accident and her whole world is suddenly shaken to the core. Although Johanne and Luise don't necessarily see eye to eye, they must now join forces whether they like it or not: They need to save the company, in which they both have shares.

In this story of two cousins who could hardly be more different, buried secrets are brought to light at last, and there is a last-ditch attempt to save a business that means a whole lot more than it originally seemed.

‘If we were going to characterise cities, then Vienna would be a woman ...’

Vienna, 1928. The three elderly ladies at Emilie Flöge’s fashion salon are perturbed. A Miss Wimmer from Berlin has requested interviews with the ‘Queens of Vienna’. But what will she want to ask? Everybody already knows that Anna Sacher breeds bulldogs, smokes cigars, bets on horse-racing, and yet has never revealed the recipe for Sacher-Torte, the most famous cake in Austria. Likewise, it’s no secret that Emilie has never married, modelling instead for the most renowned painter in Vienna, Gustav Klimt. Helene Stein-Kleiner, wife of the sugar magnate, does not wish to speak about one of the biggest scandals in Vienna, which changed her life forever. But the young woman from Berlin has an agenda of her own.

Henny Arland studied German, Theatre, Film and Television Studies. She currently works as a freelance writer and researcher for film and television, and lives in Berlin with her family.

- The moving story of an unusual woman, scientist and fighter for women's rights, whose life's work extends to the present day
- For all readers of the biographical novels by Laura Baldini and Eva-Maria Bast

'I want to know absolutely everything—but I'll never marry!'

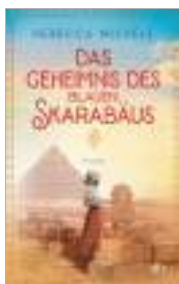

From childhood, Countess Maria von Linden was more interested in nature than in needlework and in 1891, she became the first woman in Württemberg to finish a secondary-school education and the first female student at the University of Tübingen. In 1910, she was awarded the title of professor as the first female German scientist. And in her private life she was unconventional equally exercising the right to love whomever she wanted – although she remained unmarried all her life. This is the moving story of an exceptional woman, scientist and champion of women's rights, whose legacy lives on to this day.

The finale to the epic saga: powerful emotions and challenges

Berlin, 1931. In uncertain times, the doctor's daughters look for stability within their families. Toni has found the love of her life, and is hoping a baby will make their happiness complete. Although she is able to help many of her patients fulfil their desire to have children, she cannot do the same for herself. Will her mother be able to help? Her mother, meanwhile, has worries of her own: Her husband has fallen ill, and when help is offered, it comes – quite unexpectedly – from a former adversary. Events come thick and fast – but, is she willing to give up her life in California?

The autumn sister searches for her roots in the Moselle region

Out of the four 'Season Sisters', Autumn is the shy and sensitive one, who only feels safe on her parents' farm in Wales. Autumn's great passion is horses, and it's only in their company – and perhaps also in the company of the groom, Liam – that she can truly open up. A casual remark puts Autumn on the trail of her mother's family history, and she realises that her mother is German: In fact, she is descended from an aristocratic family originally from the Moselle Valley. But why has she hidden her origins from her daughters? Autumn's curiosity is piqued, but if she wants to find out more about her family history, she'll have to go to Cochem on the Moselle River. And so, she takes her first halting steps into the outside world.

Anna Helford was first a nurse, then studied German and religious studies, then became an actress, playwright, and dog trainer. Her great passion is the Victorian era. Her favourite things to do are wandering through Exmoor with her husband and five dogs, sitting by the fire with tea and a good book, and exploring old houses.

An unexpected inheritance leads the winter sister back to her roots

Winter is the ambitious, determined one of the four ‘Season Sisters’, who left her family and has made a high-flying career for herself in New York. When she receives a letter from England, Winter is astonished to read that her grandmother has left her a property on Exmoor – and that her father, David, is descended from the British aristocracy! The family seat, Whiteball Hall, might be in dire need of renovation, but it also has no shortage of charm and, hence, Winter is sure it could be transformed into a luxury resort. With the aid of Bruno, a tradesman, she sets to work on her plans. Yet the walls of Whiteball Hall conceal a dreadful secret.

A story about changing your mindset and the joys of finding true love – the brilliant finale to the sisters’ four-part series, in which the demons of the past are finally put to rest.

Or is there something else behind it all, something much larger?

Paul Grote is Germany's best-known author of wine-related crime novels. He first discovered his interest in wine and wine-growing while working as a reporter in South America, and has since developed it into a primary focus. He has visited all of the major wine-growing regions in Europe and published eighteen crime novels centred around wine.

The physician of Padua and the healer

Padua, 1540. Andreas Vesal, a doctor and university professor, offers lodgings to a young student. It is the herbalist Verena von Pfäffikon, disguised as a man, who has narrowly escaped being burnt at the stake. Together they perform an autopsy on a man who has been poisoned. But who might be interested in killing a student, and why? Who is behind it all? As Vesal and Verena hunt for answers, they find themselves in increasingly in mortal danger ...

We might not be here tomorrow

After the attack of Hamas on Israel on October 7th, 2023, Lizzie Doron, normally a voice calling loudly for democracy and peace, fell silent. There were so many dead to mourn that there was barely any room in her head or heart for anything else. But the political issues have returned with even greater urgency, and with them countless stories, images and experiences. Hence, Lizzie Doron has turned to the harrowing stories of survivors or those left behind, moments of comic absurdity with the grandkids in an air-raid shelter, political discussions at the hairdresser's, silence on the telephone with a Palestinian friend. This is the moving testimony of a traumatised society, one which must now find itself anew.
